FULL TEXT

Are you one of the millions of job seekers looking for a new career opportunity? If so, you've likely come across Indeed - one of the most popular jobs search engines on the internet. Finding a job can be difficult, but using the right tools and resources makes it a little bit easier. If you're looking for a new job, Indeed is a great place to start. In this post, we'll give you five tips to help you get the most out of your job search on Indeed. Keep reading for more helpful advice!

Use an Indeed Scraper

If you're looking for a new job, a scraper can be an extremely useful tool. Rather than manually searching Indeed's massive database of jobs, an Indeed scraper allows you to quickly and easily scrape job listings from the site. This can save you hours and help you find the perfect job faster. In addition, this scraper can be customized to search for specific keywords, locations, and job types. This ensures that you only see listings that are relevant to you, further saving you time. Whether you're just starting your job search or you've been looking for a while, scrapers can be a valuable resource.

Get Job Alerts

One of the very first things that you should consider doing when using Indeed to get a job is enabling job alerts. One of the things that many people struggle with the most isn't knowing what jobs are available, and most of the time people are often a little too late when applying for a job. Once you have created a profile on Indeed, you will automatically begin getting job alerts.

These job alerts will be relevant and similar to jobs that you have already applied for, meaning that you won't have to do any extra effort on your part if you don't want to. The other great thing about job alerts is they allow you to apply for a job as soon as you get notified.

Try Separate Searches

The next thing that you should begin practicing when using Indeed is trying separate searches as well as trying combined searches. One thing that many people new to Indeed don't realize is that it's actually a powerful search engine and works very well if you use it correctly.

With that being said, you need to be very specific about the job title that you are searching for since Indeed will be very specific with the answers that it gives. In addition to this, if you want to, for example, be a psychologist within the sports industry, then you'll have to search for psychologists and sports in separate quotations.

Upload Your Resume

Perhaps one of the most important things that you can do if you are trying to get a job using indeed is to upload your resume as soon as possible. Many people first come to, indeed, when applying for a job after using a Google search. As a result, many will have the option of either creating a resume or uploading one.

If you have already been on a job hunt for a while, then chances are you already have a resume that you can upload. A good idea would be to find a few examples of good resumes to compare yours to, to ensure that everything looks good.

Create an Attractive Profile

As mentioned above, most people will find indeed after applying for a job on Google search. If this is what you have done or you are considering using, indeed you're going to have to create a profile, and the good news is that it's free.

When creating your profile, you need to make it as attractive as possible with as much important information that is necessary. Keep in mind that you'll be competing with potentially hundreds if not thousands of other people, so the one thing that you can do to affect the decision of being hired or not create a great profile.

Be Selective

One of the biggest mistakes that many people make when looking for jobs is thinking that applying for as many as possible and seeing who replies is an effective strategy. Unfortunately, this is not the case, and if you are applying for jobs that don't strictly or necessarily meet your criteria of skills or interests, you are most likely not going to get a response back.

Instead, a great way to go about finding a job using indeed is to be as selective as possible. What this means is that you should put time and effort into interviewing each of the jobs that you see to find out if you match what they are looking for, and if you could be good at doing the job. This will most likely get you more replies and increases the odds of you getting a job.
